A Reasonable Doubt:
A Robin Lockwood
Novel

By
Phillip Margolin

A remake of Fritz Lang's 1956 film of the same name, it starred Jesse Metcalfe, Michael Douglas and Amber Tamblyn. The original video is kept in Finley's desk with a back-up placed in a safe deposit box. Reasonable doubts about 'Beyond a Reasonable Doubt', Los Angeles Times, September 11, 2009. The movie has complex, ambiguous messages about faith. Nicolas is unable to prove how the evidence could be planted, and his boss is forced to cancel his investigative unit due to budget cuts. After Nicolas flirts with Assistant D.A. Ella Crystal to obtain a videotape, they begin dating, despite his distrust of her boss. A mother seems willing to turn a blind eye to her son's troubles. He tries to retrieve the back-up, but is killed during a high-speed pursuit with Merchant, and the back-up is destroyed. Confronting Nicolas, Crystal is horrified when he desperately tries to defend himself and he implies that exposing Hunter was worth the woman's life. A former police detective discussed as a candidate for Governor, Hunter built his career on a string of convictions based on last-minute, circumstantial evidence. Nicolas has no proof that the victim's blood, found on his false evidence, was planted by Hunter; with Finley's death, he has no visual proof of his plan. Crystal, having already alerted the police, tells Nicolas the flaw in his plan: he is not subject to double jeopardy law because his case was only declared a mistrial. 5 February 2009. The doctored photo evidence leads to Hunter's arrest in a public scandal. A nun who rules a school with an iron fist accuses a priest of abusing a child, even though she has no proof. She deduces that Nicolas hired the woman to play the prostitute in the documentary; when the woman later came to Shreveport to blackmail Nicolas, he really did kill her, using her murder to expose Hunter. Beyond a Reasonable Doubt, Variety, September 3, 2009. Finley reluctantly accompanies him to obtain objects that will link Nicolas to the murder, which he records on video with Nicolas holding a newspaper, showing the date to be after the murder. Still believing in Nicolas, Crystal begins her own investigation, unaware Hunter knows she is dating Nicolas; she is followed by Merchant. A District Attorney in the Hot Seat, New York Times, September 11, 2009. Plot Reporter C.J. Nicolas built his career on an award-winning documentary about a pregnant teenage prostitute in Buffalo, New York, who died of a drug overdose after the death of her baby. Crystal obtains crime scene photos from Hunter's convictions and takes them to digital photography experts, who determine that each object containing the suspect's DNA were digitally added to the photos after the fact. London as Judge Sheppard Krystal Kofie as Taiesha Grant James as Aaron Wakefield Wallace Merck as Gilbert Romans Robert Larriviere as Kevin Lynn Tarrow Randal Reeder as Survivalist Critical reception The movie was a critical and commercial failure. The tape suggests that Hunter uses LL Merchant - lead detective on all 17 arrests that led to convictions - to obtain DNA evidence from suspects in custody and plant it to support a conviction. Kids give a new student the cold shoulder and make fun of him in class. Now a TV reporter in Shreveport, Louisiana, he works to reestablish himself through an investigative unit with fellow reporter Corey Finley. The jury convicts Nicolas, and he is sentenced to death. Hunter instructs Merchant to destroy the video evidence, and Finley finds his desk ransacked. He is arrested and charged with the murder, but Merchant requests the case be transferred to him to steal credit for the DA, to Nickerson's dismay. Determined to expose Hunter, Nicolas concocts a scheme to frame himself for a prostitute's murder using circumstantial evidence. Nicolas is released, his conviction declared a mistrial, and he becomes a media celebrity, while Hunter's convictions are due to be re-examined by the state. Nicolas reveals his plot in court using only the dated receipts for his falsified evidence, but Hunter casts doubt on his story. Retrieved March 14, 2015. Hunter visits Nicolas on death row to reveal that Nicolas' phone calls to Crystal, guiding her investigation, have been recorded. ^ Holland, Jonathan. Beron as Lieutenant Alex Merchant Sewell Whitney as Martin Weldon David Jensen as Gary Spota Sharon K. When she attempts to go to the police, Merchant tries to kill her with his car, but Nickerson shoots Merchant dead, revealing that he had been "following him following" Crystal. The next step in his plan is to wait until the prosecution rests its case, then introduce the documentary evidence exposing the truth. Nicolas is convinced that District Attorney Mark Hunter is corrupt. Trio set for 'Doubt' remake, Variety, February 6, 2008. A novice gives her mother superior ammunition to destroy someone's reputation. External links Beyond a Reasonable Doubt at IMDb Retrieved from " Production was announced in February 2008 and filming began the following month. [2] The film was theatrically released on September 11, 2009, by After Dark Films and Anchor Bay Films to extremely negative reviews; it was a box office bomb, earning only $4 million on a $25 million budget. Crystal, unaware of Nicolas' plan, visits him in jail, and he convinces her not to quit her job to join his defense team. Re-watching Nicolas' documentary, Crystal recognizes the prostitute's hands as the hands of the victim in the murder for which Nicolas was convicted. ^ Catsoulis, Jeannette. Upon investigating Nicolas' activity, Merchant informs Hunter that Nicolas is trying to set them up. Nicolas gets himself arrested for DUI by a police contact, Lt. Nickerson, while wearing his falsified circumstantial evidence. Disgusted, Crystal leaves as the police arrive to arrest Nicolas, but not before telling him that his actions were never about bringing down Hunter, but to protect his life of lies, asking him "how can I love a lie?"
